

In 2012 the Foundation Made in Cloister launched on a project to restore the 16th century cloister of the Church of Santa Caterina a Formiello, a rare example of Neapolitan renaissance and industrial architecture that had been completely abandoned.

Because of the site's history and location, the project's aim has been that of recuperating a part of Naples' cultural heritage. Its intention is to renew local traditional crafts with a contemporary approach, bringing local master craftsmen to work with international artists and designers.
